

Fox

Searchable transcript

Author: Margaret Wild, illustrated by Ron Brooks

Author: Margaret Wild, illustrated by Ron Brooks

Source: `Fox_Margaret_Wild_Ron_Brooks_z_library_sk,_1lib_sk,_z_lib_sk.pdf`
(39 PDF pages; story on PDF pages 10-36)

Prepared: 9 September 2026

> Internal school working copy prepared from a school-accessible PDF. Keep with the restricted book files. Do not publish this transcript in GitHub, Supabase, or the public progress viewer.

THROUGH THE CHARRED FOREST, OVER HOT ASH, RUNS DOG, with a bird clamped in his big, gentle mouth. He takes her to his cave above the river, and there he tries to tend her burnt wing; but Magpie does not want his help. "I will never again be able to fly," she whispers.

"I know," says Dog. He is silent for a moment, then he says, "I am blind in one eye, but life is still good."

"An eye is nothing!" says Magpie. "How would you feel if you couldn't run?"

Dog does not answer. Magpie drags her body into the shadow of the rocks, until she feels herself melting into blackness.

DAYS, perhaps a week later, she wakes with a rush of grief. Dog is waiting. He persuades her to go with him to the riverbank.

"Hop on my back," he says. "Look into the water and tell me what you see."

Sighing, Magpie does as he asks. Reflected in the water are clouds and sky and trees -- and something else.

"I see a strange new creature!" she says.

"That is us," says Dog. "Now hold on tight!"

With Magpie clinging to his back, he races through the scrub, past the stringybarks, past the clumps of yellow box trees, and into blueness. He runs so swiftly, it is almost as if he were flying.

Magpie feels the wind streaming through her feathers, and she rejoices. "FLY, Dog, FLY! I will be your missing eye, and you will be my wings."

And so Dog runs, with Magpie on his back, every day, through Summer, through Winter.

After the rains, when saplings are springing up everywhere, a fox comes into the bush; Fox with his haunted eyes and rich red coat. He flickers through the trees like a tongue of fire, and Magpie trembles.

But Dog says, "Welcome. We can offer you food and shelter."

"Thank you," says Fox. "I saw you running this morning. You looked extraordinary." Dog beams, but Magpie shrinks away. She can feel Fox staring at her burnt wing.

In the evenings, when the air is creamy with blossom, Dog and Magpie relax at the mouth of the cave, enjoying each other's company. Now and again Fox joins in the conversation, but Magpie can feel him watching, always watching her. And at night his smell seems to fill the cave -- a smell of rage and envy and loneliness.

Magpie tries to warn Dog about Fox. "He belongs nowhere," she says. "He loves no one." But Dog says, "He's all right. Let him be."

That night, when Dog is asleep, Fox whispers to Magpie, "I can run faster than Dog. Faster than the wind. Leave Dog and come with me." Magpie says, "I will never leave Dog. I am his missing eye and he is my wings."

Again Magpie says, "I will never leave Dog. I am his missing eye and he is my wings."

Fox says no more that night, but the next day when Dog is at the river, he whispers to Magpie, "Do you remember what it is like to fly? Truly fly?"

But later that day, as Dog runs through the scrub with Magpie on his back, she thinks, "This is nothing like flying. Nothing!"

And when at dawn Fox whispers to her for the third time, she whispers back, "I am ready."

While Dog sleeps, Magpie and Fox streak past coolibah trees, rip through long grass, pelt over rocks.

Fox runs so fast that his feet scarcely touch the ground, and Magpie exults, "At last I am flying. Really flying!"

Fox scorches through woodlands, through dusty plains, through salt pans, and out into the hot red desert.

He stops, scarcely panting. There is silence between them. Neither moves, neither speaks. Then Fox shakes Magpie off his back as he would a flea, and pads away.

He turns and looks at Magpie, and he says, "Now you and Dog will know what it is like to be truly alone." Then he is gone. In the stillness, Magpie hears a faraway scream. She cannot tell if it is a scream of triumph or despair.

Magpie huddles, a scruff of feathers adrift in heat. She can feel herself burning into nothingness. It would be so easy just to die here in the desert.

But then she thinks of Dog waking to find her gone.

Slowly, jiggety-hop, she begins the long journey home.

- The opening spreads show a charred, fire-blackened forest; Dog carries the burnt-winged Magpie in his mouth to his cave above the river.
- The riverbank reflection spread shows Magpie on Dog's back seeing their joint reflection -- "a strange new creature" -- the visual anchor of their friendship.
- The running spreads show Magpie riding Dog's back through scrub, stringybarks and yellow box trees into open blueness.
- Fox first appears flickering through green regrowth "like a tongue of fire," his haunted eyes and red coat contrasting with Dog's warmth.
- The cave spreads show Dog and Magpie relaxing at the cave mouth while Fox watches Magpie; night scenes carry Fox's presence through red and black tones.
- The flight spreads show Fox streaking with Magpie past coolibah trees, long grass and rocks, then scorching through woodlands, dusty plains, salt pans and into the hot red desert.
- The abandonment spread shows Magpie tiny and alone in the vast red desert after Fox shakes her off "as he would a flea."

- The closing spread shows Magpie beginning the long jiggety-hop journey home beneath a huge red sun.
- The PDF is a fully-scanned copy with no embedded text layer, so there was no text layer to cross-check against; every story page was read visually.
- Story text is hand-lettered in mixed case; opening words "THROUGH THE CHARRED FOREST, OVER HOT ASH, RUNS DOG" and "DAYS" are set in capitals as printed.
- Pages 13 and 24 carry text in vertical/rotated blocks integrated with the illustrations; the reading order above follows the narrative sequence.
- On page 24 the refrain "I will never leave Dog. I am his missing eye and he is my wings." appears twice (once as a standalone block, once within the sequence) -- both occurrences are transcribed.

Story text transcribed from visual reading of every story page (PDF pages 10-36), verified against the rendered scans at 150 dpi. Cover (page 1), front illustrations (pages 2-3, 5-6), title page (page 7), copyright/imprint data (page 8), dedication (page 9), praise/blurb matter (page 4), author biographies (page 37), and closing endpaper illustrations (pages 38-39) are not included as story prose. Illustration-only story spreads (pages 11, 21, 25, 29, 32, 35) carry the narrative visually and are indexed above.